See Something, Say Something is an exhibition featuring three artists with diverse cultural perspectives who address important issues of our time with intelligence and wit. The warning, "See Something, Say Something," on posters and in announcements at bus depots, train stations and airports, encourages citizens to stay alert and speak up if they notice something amiss. While the phrase originated to convey the threat posed by terrorism after the 9/11 attacks, in this exhibition the meaning is expanded to encourage individuals to call out additional threats to society such as racism, sexism, economic disparity, and climate change.
